Russia to rule in religion

possible wait to detriment to S Church

Associated Press

PROVCO — Working a few short hours from an old Russian Orthodox church, its golden crosses glittering in the sun, well-scrubbed American missionaries pass out invitations to a morning meeting of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Moscow.

Young Americans in white shirts and dark ties are among 500 missionaries who have helped swell the following of 7,000 people in the nation since the church went active in Russia six years ago. Religious groups, things have changed dramatically in the past few years said Donald Jarvis, head of the mission in Russia and a periodic visitor for more than 30 years. "It's quite gratifying to see what we've accomplished."

After the post-Soviet freedom that has allowed the LDS Church and other religious groups to flourish may be hindered by pending legislation aimed to curb the influx of religious organizations that proselyte in the growing popularity has stirred the conservative Russian Orthodox Church and communists — who reigned throughout the Soviet era — has driven them into an uneasy partnership.

The church's backing, the committee said last month overwhelmingly approved legislation that would give the state the power to revoke the legal status of most religious groups and monitor their services.

President Boris Yeltsin's government has shown no intention of banning mainstream religious groups. But under the proposed law, which now is before the president, religious groups would have to work in Russia for 15 years before they could register, own property, set up bank accounts or perform other basic tasks.

Human rights groups, religious organizations and U.S. congressmen have written to Yeltsin condemning the legislation as a violation of the 1993 Russian constitution, which says all religions should be treated equally.

"This law has a discriminatory character and takes us back to the time of Brezhnev and Khrushchev, when we were harassed by the authorities," said Vladimir Murza, who leads the Evangelical churches in the country.

Murza is a minister who was jailed from 1960-63 for his religious activities, as was his father, who spent 10 years in prison.

Yeltsin has a record of defending religious freedoms, but hasn't said whether he will veto this law. Even if he rejects the measure, Parliament has more than enough votes to override a veto.

The Orthodox Church, by far the largest and most influential religious organization in Russia, says the bill is needed to safeguard against cults.

"We don't understand the logic of the bill," said Murza. "Missionary work is as old as the times of Jesus. It was missionaries who brought Christianity to Russia in the first place."

LIMITED CHOICES: A Russian worker stands outside an Orthodox Church on Red Square in Moscow. This church may soon be one of the few religions allowed in the country after recent legislation to regulate religions.

SLC rapist still at large after assaults last week

By DENISE PALMER
Universe Staff Writer

Police are still looking for a man who raped three women in Salt Lake City last week.

Salt Lake City Police report that all three rapes — one Thursday, one Friday and one Saturday — happened early in the morning.

Salt Lake Police Officer Don Bell said the women were walking alone when the attacks occurred.

"All three women were walking when the assailant appeared out of the shadows to attack them. He threatened them with a gun or a knife, although none of the victims were shown a weapon," he said.

Bell also said the rapist threatened the women, telling them not to report the rapes to the police.

"He took the ID from two of them to threaten that if they went to the cops he could find them," Bell said.

The attacker is described as an American Indian or Hispanic man in his 30s. He has thick black shoulder-length hair, and is clean shaven except for a mustache. He is between 5 feet 6 inches and 6 feet tall. He weighs approximately 185 pounds. He has no accent, and speaks very articulately.

Officer Bell said the rapist may have attacked two women earlier this summer.

"There's a chance he's responsible for two other rapes in June, but both victims have moved and we haven't tracked them down yet," he said.

"This is a blitz attack, and they (do not happen) often," he said.

Women are advised to stay in pairs or groups when they go walking.

"Make sure that you travel in pairs at least for your own safety, and stay out of dark areas," said Officer Kirk Mittelman of the Provo Police Department.

Bell said women should also have a plan of what to do if they are attacked.

"Have a plan, but don't be paranoid. When I say to have a plan I mean think ahead. Think what you would do if a guy came and grabbed you. Very few men want to attack you on the sidewalk," he said.

"Think of what you would do right there on the sidewalk. Would you lay down and scream? He might kick and punch you, but very few men will rape you on a public sidewalk. If you go with him, your chances of being hurt escalate. The more public area you are in, the safer you are," he said.

Sgt. Jeff Strong of the University Police does not think women should worry about not carrying their identification because of this case.

Mittelman gave some additional advice for women who are worried about carrying their identification.

"Get them out of your day planner or purse," he said.

"To avoid theft or any type of crime, get in the habit of putting the cash, ID, or credit cards in pockets of jeans so it's harder for people to take them from you," Mittelman said.

Bell said the Salt Lake victims have been shown photos, but no match has been made yet. He said the police have many suspects and will keep looking until the rapist is caught.

Lake monitored for pollution

By LAURA PERRETT
Universe Staff Writer

Utah Lake has been polluted in the past, and opinions vary on its cleanliness today.

Mike Wray, a senior from Orem, studying business and French, said, "I've lived in Provo most of my life. The lake used to be a lot cleaner than it is. Over the years, people haven't taken care of it, so it has become polluted."

John Averett, a professional librarian and 33-year resident of Springville, had a different opinion.

Averett said the lake is cleaner since it has flooded. "I don't think as much is being dumped now,"

He uses the lake to water-ski, boat, kayak and fish.

"It's nice having it there," he said.

Opinions about the cleanliness of Utah Lake affect the attitudes of others.

Dianne Wurtz, a senior from Thousand Oaks, Calif., majoring in art, said, "I've never seen the water, but just from what I've heard, I wouldn't swim in it."

These opinions demonstrate the need for education about Utah Lake and its pollutants.

Utah Lake is monitored for pollutants every other year by the Division of Water Quality, as are 175 other lakes in the area.

The division performed an intensive lake survey in 1995, monitoring 12 sites at least monthly for heavy metals (lead, zinc and iron), chemicals, nutrients (nitrates and phosphates) and solids.

The lake is being surveyed this year and was monitored Tuesday.

Richard Denton, manager of water monitoring, said Utah Lake has no metal problems. "The major problem is suspended solids and nitrates and phosphates," Denton said.

The lake has microscopic pieces of dirt that do not settle because they aren't heavy enough. "This is considered a type of pollution," Denton said.

The sediments, or dirt, come into the lake from natural erosion and from man's activities. "That's what causes the lake to be brown," Denton said.

Larry Mullins, Utah Lake park manager, said, "There is rarely a time on Utah Lake when the silt sits still."

Denton agreed and said, "The wind blows enough that it continually churns the things up and (the lake) looks muddy all the time."

Salt is another type of solid Denton monitors. "If (the salt) gets above a certain level, it kills the plants," Denton said.

The salt comes from natural sources, as well as roads and parking lots in the winter, Denton said.

Mullins said salt springs in the Goshen Bay area flow into the bottom of the lake and contribute to its saltness.

Nitrates and phosphates, other major pollutants at Utah Lake, result from sewage plants, industry around the lake, fish hatcheries, agriculture and fertilizers, Denton said.

Utah Lake thrives despite abuse

By LAURA PERRETT
Universe Staff Writer

Utah Lake has been a resource to Provo for thousands of years, yet it has suffered permanent alterations, according to Daniel C. Janetski, associate professor of anthropology.

Janetski discusses his views in "Utah Lake: Its Role in the Prehistory of the Valley," in Utah Historical Quarterly, volume 58.

Utah Lake's native fish, vegetation and composition were altered by early settlers. "By 1900, 100 years after the first Mormon settlement moved into the valley, the lake's fishery was doomed because of over-exploitation and ill-advised management,"

Seven of the 12 fish species native to Utah Lake are now rare or extinct, although the lake supports large populations of exotic fish introduced by settlers, Janetski said.

Settlers also affected native vegetation by introducing exotic fish and plants, Janetski said.

An example of altered vegetation is the pondweed that used to cover the lake's bottom. "Prior to the introduction of the German carp in the 1880s, pondweed and other vegetation grew in the sheltered coves and bays. (Pondweed) played a critical role in the lake's ecology as beds held the bottom of the lake firm."

The pondweed kept sediment from stirring and allowed sunlight to reach other vegetation, Janetski said.

Larry Mullins, Utah Lake park manager, said people say the lake was clearer when the pioneers arrived.

The lake had too many carp before anyone realized they were eating the vegetation. "Now when the wind blows, the silt gets stirred up," Mullins said.

Mullins said the lake was again affected in the 1930s when numerous communities used the lake as a sewage plant.

Mullins said "It was a dirty lake ... until a major community and state clean-up effort (began)." By the mid-1950s, all sewage was going into sewage plants, Mullins said.

Janetski said the lake is still vibrant and alive, despite the abuses it has sustained. If we continue to be wiser it will continue to be productive.

Study shows flu spray effective

WASHINGTON — An experimental flu vaccine administered as a nasal spray has been found to be highly effective among young children in a new study.

With financing from the National Institutes of Health and Aviron, a California biotechnology company, doctors gave 1,602 children ages 15 months to 6 years two doses of either the vaccine or a dummy spray last fall.

Only 1 percent of the 1,070 children inoculated with the real spray got sick last winter compared to 18 percent of the 532 children who received the placebo, the NIH announced Monday.

"The advantage of a spray is wonderful," said NIH influenza expert Dominick Iacuzio. He noted that most children avoid existing vaccines because they don't like shots.

Initial indications that the new nasal vaccine is effective came last spring when doctors said it appeared promising in a study of 320 children.

Albania unable to gain gun control

TIRANA, Albania — A 5-year-old boy shot and killed his mother while he played with a gun, one of 12 shooting deaths reported in 24 hours in Albania, officials said Tuesday.

The killings — which occurred from Monday morning to Tuesday morning — illustrate the challenges Albania's new government faces in restoring order to a country awash in weaponry.

The 5-year-old accidentally killed his mother in the town of Mat, some 25 miles northeast of Tirana, the Interior Ministry said. No other details were available.

Police have set up several roadblocks around Tirana in an effort to recover some of the guns. Armed gangs roam the streets of many towns and guns have become toys for young children.

The worst recent tension was reported in Berat, 45 miles south of Tirana, where seven people lost their lives during battles between rival gangs.

New margarine blocks cholesterol

HELSINKI, Finland — The Finnish maker of the cholesterol-blocking margarine, Benecol, announced Tuesday it had signed a deal with McNeil Consumer Products to market the margarine in the United States.

Benecol became a sensation among health-conscious people in Finland last year and investors from around the world came to try to negotiate deals with its maker, the Raisio Group.

Raisio is planning to build a factory in the United States to manufacture sitostanol, the margarine's key ingredient.

Sitostanol is derived from pine oil, which usually is discarded as waste by the forest-products industry. Studies have shown that sitostanol inhibits the absorption of the health-threatening form of cholesterol into the bloodstream.

The benefits of sitostanol have been known since the 1950s, but it wasn't until 1989 that Finnish scientists discovered how to make it soluble in fat.

Confessed killer charged with 2nd murder

TOKYO — A 15-year-old who has confessed to beheading a younger boy was charged Tuesday with another murder — the bludgeoning of a 10-year-old girl, police said.

The junior high school student, who is a minor and cannot be identified, has confessed to attacking three other girls, two of the attacks were non-fatal, Kobe officers said.

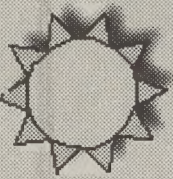

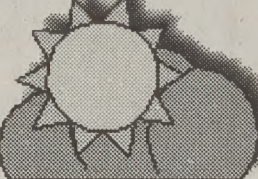

The suspect was already under arrest in the murder of 11-year-old Jun Hase, whose severed head was found in a schoolyard in May.

On Tuesday the suspect was served with a warrant for the murder of Ayaka Yamashita, 10, who was bludgeoned to death March 16 with a steel pipe.

Police have seized horror videos, knives and a book about the San Francisco Zodiac killings in the home of the suspect.

Under Japanese law, the accused boy is too young to go to jail. If he is found guilty, the court will choose between probation and putting the boy in a reformatory.

Versace's murder suspect one of FBI's most wanted

Associated Press

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. — Gianni Versace, who dressed celebrities the world over in his glamorous, sexy designs, was gunned down outside his oceanfront villa Tuesday and police named one of the FBI's most wanted fugitives as their leading suspect.

Versace, 50, was shot twice in the back of the head at point-blank range.

More than 12 hours later, Miami Beach police chief Richard Barreto identified the suspect as Andrew Phillip Cunanan, 27, who was already being sought in the slayings of four men from Minneapolis to New Jersey. Cunanan was known to move in gay circles; Versace was gay.

Investigators said they didn't know of any previous link between Cunanan and the designer.

Versace (pronounced ver-SAH-chay) was returning home from the News Cafe on South Beach's Ocean Drive after buying an Italian newspaper when he was slain outside the gates of his Mediterranean-style mansion. There was no sign of robbery.

"I do know it is not a random act of violence," Barreto said. "I believe that he was targeted."

Police said Versace was shot by a white man in his mid-20s, dressed in a white or gray shirt and dark shorts and carrying a backpack.

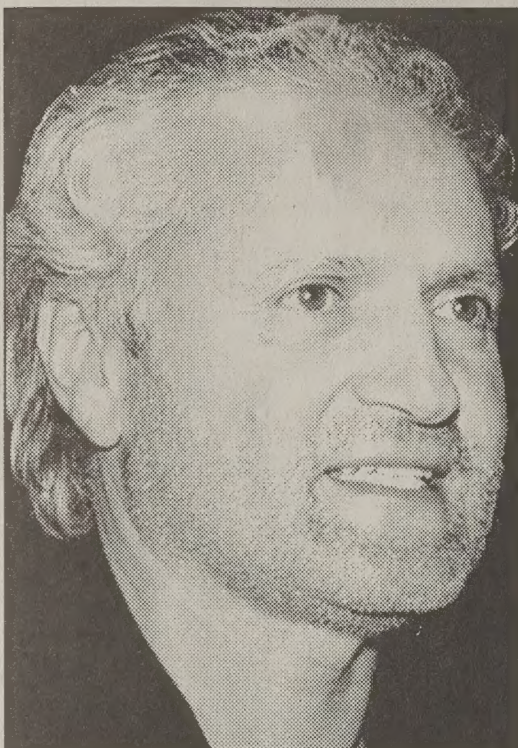

Officers later cordoned off a five-story municipal parking garage near the scene after a witness saw a man fitting the description of the suspect.

WTVJ-TV in Miami reported that police found clothing under a red Chevrolet pickup truck in the parking garage, and that the truck's vehicle identification number matched that of the vehicle Cunanan was last reported driving. Police believed the clothes belonged to Cunanan.

The station also quoted unnamed police sources as saying Versace was killed with a .40-caliber handgun, the same caliber weapon used in the murders Cunanan is suspected of committing.

Police said Cunanan stole a red pickup truck after his last known slaying, that of a cemetery caretaker in New Jersey. Cunanan is charged in the May slaying of a Minneapolis architect who had once been his lover, and is the prime suspect in the killings of another former boyfriend in the Minneapolis area and a Chicago businessman.

Along with Giorgio Armani, Versace was considered Italy's leading ready-to-wear designer and a symbol of Italian fashion.

"Gianni Versace together with a handful of names symbolizes the success of Italian fashion all over the world," Armani said. "My reaction is one of revolt against such an unnatural and violent death and one of profound grief."

Hours after the slaying, a puddle of blood remained on the steps of Versace's three-story home. Hundreds of people gathered across the street, popularly known as "Deco Drive."

Martin Weinstein said he heard gunshots and ran down the street. "And when I arrived I saw a guy lying on the step in a pool of blood," he said. "At first I didn't realize who it was. But then I realized it was Versace."

Versace's mansion is the only private home on the fashionable stretch of Ocean Drive. The estate, created from two aging Art Deco hotels, faces the Atlantic Ocean. It is surrounded by a high wall, and his Renaissance-style crest adorns the ornate entrances to the estate.

Versace entertained stars such as Madonna and Robert DeNiro and liked to take leisurely walks along South Beach, often alone.

Maria Contessa, owner of Zoo XIV, a small clothing boutique near Versace's home, said the designer frequented the store to "buy clothes for himself, for his friends and particularly for his boyfriend."

A native of Reggio Calabria in southern Italy, Versace began designing ready-to-wear for other firms in 1972 in Milan. He launched the Gianni Versace label in 1978.

Versace gained fame in the 1980s, staging his fashion shows with blaring rock music, glaring floodlights and mega screens reproducing what was going on on the runway.

His first big hit was the use of clingy, chain-mail material. In the next decade, he was largely responsible for the rebirth in Italy of the miniskirt — making it so short that some called it the "Band-Aid." He was a major force in creating the black-leather look and the glittery sequined jackets so loved by pop singers.

Celebrities who have worn Versace designs include Courtney Love, Elton John, Demi Moore, Rod Stewart, Jane Fonda, Prince, Julie Andrews, Kim Basinger, Jane Seymour, Oksana Baiul and Princess Diana, according to his company.

At Versace headquarters in Italy, a neo-classical palazzo in downtown Milan, the front doors were closed.

Crossed lines cause Provo to lose power

Universe Services

A power outage caused by a crossed line between Provo City Power and Light knocked out of the electricity supplied by City Utilities early Tuesday afternoon, said a spokesperson for Provo City Utilities.

Cal Christiansen, electronics manager for Provo City Utilities, said the main line to Provo is a 138,000 volt line. When the voltage drops it affects the amount of power that can be sent into the Provo line. The voltage dropped nearly 30,000 watts, and took out breakers in Provo.

Residents in Orem and as far as Spanish Fork were without power for up to an hour. Some locations had power for just a split second.

Salt Lake dispatchers for Provo and Light said the problem occurred when workers were up lines. A cross between two causes the voltage to drop. The crossing lines lost enough voltage to affect Provo's power.

Landfill become nature park

By LAURA PERRETT
Universe Staff Writer

Provo County landfill is supposed to have a new look by next year as a nature park will sit atop it. The landfill, in use since 1962, has a filling capacity. Linford said there are four million tons of waste in the landfill's 65 acres. Provo and Weber County) have been working together to come up with a closure plan on the landfill," Ritchie, chairman of Weber County Commission. "This situation is an on-going process." "We want (the plans) to be consistent with activities the city has been doing," he said. "We said a final decision has not been made yet."

Linford said, "We will be putting in native grass vegetation, trees and a perimeter and hiking trails. A wetland is already supposed to have the cap on the landfill," Linford said. "The vegetation will be put in by the end of the season, but it won't be until next year, she said. The landfill is surrounded by residential areas, and the Ogden Parkway is by the site of the new park. "We (people will come)," she said.

When the landfill is full, a nearby area serves as a temporary storage area. The garbage is sent to Provo County by way of East Ogden development, Linford said. The landfill site will possibly be used for 20th and 21st Streets in Provo.

At the old site, wells monitor water levels and methane gas to indicate if the landfill has any impact on the environment. Regulations say that any landfills being used at the present time must be monitored for 30-plus years. Dale Stephens, district manager of South Utah Valley Solid Waste, said monitoring includes testing for gases, groundwater contamination, settling and integrity of the cap or final cover, Stephens said.

Requirements include forecasting future use for the landfill, Stephens said. "The preferred end use is an open-air facility or recreation area. Our facilities are preferred because the gases are able to vent into the atmosphere and dissipate."

Stephens said there are a few incidents where structures were built atop the landfill. A detection system must be used to monitor gas build-up. "If the ventilation kicks on at a preset level, fans and (fans) pull gases out of the landfill underneath the building," Stephens said.

In addition to monitoring landfills for harmful materials, Stephens said sometimes excavated to find out how quickly waste is decomposing. "If moisture is present, organisms consume organic material in the landfill," Stephens said.

Stephens said a dry environment inside the landfill, then organisms don't consume organic material (as they would) if you have a more moist environment," he said. "In a more arid environment does not decompose as readily as places with more moisture and greater precipitation," Stephens said.

Landfills are being run by the Utah Department of Environmental Protection Agency to monitor decomposition.

SUSPECTED WAR CRIMINAL AT LARGE: Bosnian Serb Leader Radovan Karadzic, center, is one of the top war crimes suspects of the Bosnian conflict. Despite increasing international pressure and a power struggle among Serbs for his arrest, Karadzic remains at his mountain stronghold.

Clinton gives Serbs warning, revenge 'would be a mistake'

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Worried about the safety of NATO troops, President Clinton warned Bosnian Serbs on Tuesday that "it would be a grave mistake" to seek revenge for the Western arrests of war crimes suspects.

Hoping the threat of force would defuse tensions in Bosnia, administration officials promised a potent response to attacks on U.S.-led alliance troops.

Western leaders are alarmed by the angry reaction of Bosnian Serbs to last week's raid on suspected war criminals and the sentencing of another Bosnian Serb on war crimes charges. Two explosions and death threats against U.S. troops are suspected to be the work of irate Bosnian Serbs.

Clinton said the 1995 Dayton peace accords signed by Serbs clearly stated that NATO troops could arrest war crimes suspects — and that suspects should be turned over by local officials.

"They have clearly not complied with that provision of the Dayton agreement," the president said at the opening of a meeting with Democratic and Republican congressional leaders. "They've made no effort to help us get any of those people."

"And so ... they have no call to take retaliatory action, and it would be a grave mistake to do so," the president said.

He did not elaborate, but a White House official speaking on condition of anonymity said the Bosnian leadership would be held responsible and the United States would react with a "swift, forceful response."

The stern admonishment was designed to douse any smoldering violent intentions of the Bosnian Serbs, as well as put the American public on notice that the risk for U.S. troops is on the rise, officials said.

Asked if he was afraid of retaliatory action, the president told reporters, "I'm concerned about it. Of course I am."

Clinton is weighing whether to extend U.S. involvement in Bosnia beyond the June 1998 deadline. He is hearing criticism from all sides: Many lawmakers object to widening U.S. involvement; others argue that Clinton has not done enough to bring war criminals to justice.

The president left the door open Saturday to extending the mission. A day earlier, the Senate approved a non-binding resolution saying that the 8,000 U.S. troops should be out by June 30, 1998, and that European nations should provide the troops to any peacekeeping effort needed after that.

The House has voted to cut off money for the troops.

Sitting at Clinton's left in the White House meeting, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott said he had recently visited Bosnia and agreed that the Serbs had violated the Dayton peace accords that ended the bloody ethnic conflict in Bosnia.

Inner tubes ideal for Provo River

By BRADLEY S. RICHARDSON
Universe Staff Writer

Bugs, cold fingers and exploration are all a part of the experience of floating down the Provo River in an inner tube.

It is one of the most exciting ways to experience the river because riding on a tube makes the river seem like an obstacle course.

The floater must stay in the main stream to avoid branches and logs. Once in the middle of the stream, the rider must carefully maneuver under bridges and around large rocks and sticks.

"It was fun," said Cary Swapp, a junior from Riverton, majoring in chemical engineering. "We did something exciting that people just talk about, but few do."

"It's a different perspective from the river," Swapp said. "There are a few places where you could be slammed into outcroppings of tree branches, stumps, rocks and bridges."

"It's not wild enough for a raft," she said. "On a river like that it would be kind of boring."

Although many are looking for adventure others just want to relax and enjoy the ride.

"It was gorgeous," said Kamber Price from Grand Rapids, Mich., majoring in physics education. "I just like the mountains where it's still really green."

"That's what I like about Provo. If I were at home I couldn't do all these things," Price said. "We're making use of Provo's resources."

Price floated the river Friday night with several friends. Members of the group said they nearly froze.

For those that ride the river at night, beware — bugs seem to surround the swifter parts of the river.

"The bugs could get really annoying sometimes because you had to cover your face," Price said. "You couldn't help but eat a few."

"Sometimes it was hard to see with all the bugs; you had to keep your mouth shut," said Kimberly Gibbs, from Camarillo, Calif.

The tubing experience gives the rider a sense of exploration and suspense but safety is always a factor.

"Always wear some sort of personal flotation device," said Sgt. Peter Bell, search and rescue coordinator for Utah County Sheriff's Department. "Do up all the straps and ties and belts."

Sometimes people drown simply because they don't tie up their straps, he said.

"Make sure you are in a group, never float by yourself," Bell said.

Bell also encourages riders to wear clothing that will keep them warm and protect them against scrapes and bruises.

Also, scout out the river before floating it.

About three minutes down the river from the Deer Creek Reservoir there is a fork in the river. Be sure to go on the right side. On the left side there is a small bridge with only about a foot high clearance — which makes it extremely difficult to ride under.

Floater should start somewhere below the Deer Creek Reservoir and end their ride at Vivian Park, Bell said.

"Anywhere below there it gets quite treacherous with rocks and debris and tree limbs that stick out," Bell said. "We don't encourage anyone to tube or kayak below Vivian Park."

"Prior to Vivian Park it's pretty close to tube," he said.

Inevitably, those floating down the river will encounter fly fishermen. Floater should be careful.

"They (floaters) don't seem to be too big of a problem unless they get in the fisherman's way by getting too close," said John Boehm, Provo River fly fishing guide. "Sometimes they've been way too close and angered a lot of fishermen."

"If they see a fisherman ahead, try and go to the other side of the river," Boehm said.

OPINION

Disney stomps on fan

As the Internet grows and continues to creep into the homes of millions of consumers, we will see more and more regulation of its potential content. The courtrooms of the future will continue to be filled with battles of intellectual property cases that will ever shape the medium that has become commonplace in America.

The majority of the regulation regarding intellectual property is to protect images, sounds and other forms of multimedia for which corporations own the publishing rights.

But this regulation is crushing websites created by individuals that pay homage to the popular culture that these corporations turn out. These "digital shrines" that do nothing more than pay tribute to and honor various animation, movies, sounds and other multimedia are being deleted from cyberspace by lawyers and large corporations.

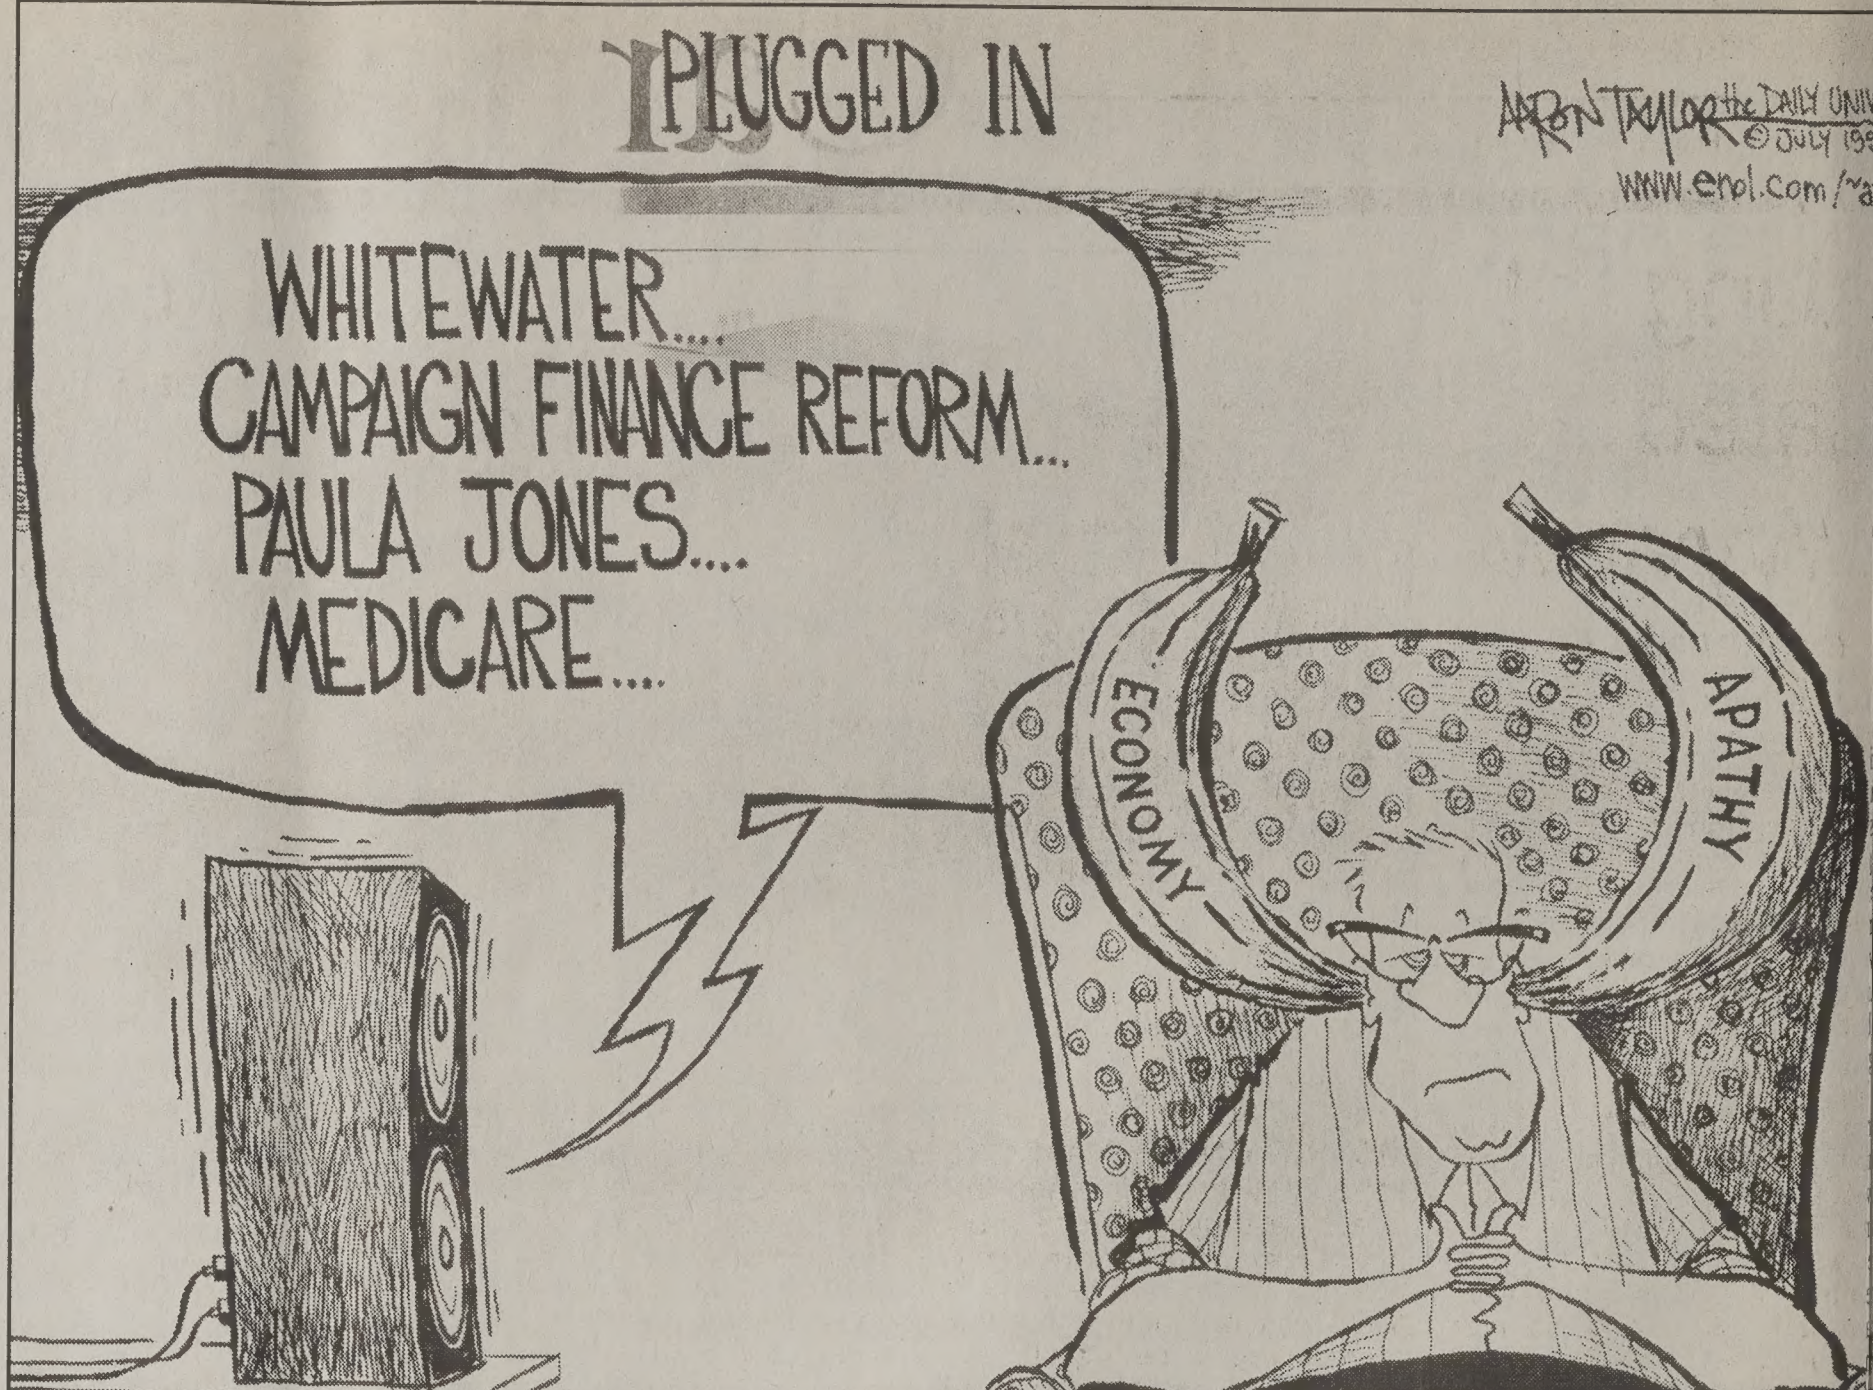

Sometimes, corporations would stamp out the admiration of their very fans and use their legal prowess to delete perceived competition from individuals who may have nothing more than a few pages with images of Hercules or Pocahontas. Void of communicate, they would circumvent the individual, and intimidate the host of an individual's page to get the site taken down.

Such was the case recently when Disney threatened Geocities, a website hosting service. Geocities sponsored an individual's homepage that Disney felt was violating its copyrights and misusing its images. The page was nothing more than an adoring fan's dedication to the animation he loved.

He loved the wrong cartoons. The site was removed without a single word to the individual from Disney, and the individual who had constructed the pages was left with an empty URL address and a feeling of betrayal from a corporate monstrosity out to "protect" its images.

Are Disney's animated copyrights really in danger when a fan displays images of Hercules or Pocahontas on his or her personal website? Does Disney have anything to lose by allowing the fans who put money in their coffers the freedom to express their adoration on the Internet? The answer is no. Do Internet users have anything to lose when corporations have the power to silence their voices without warning? The answer is yes.

LDS meetings open to everyone

Brook Heaton Dumfries
Provo

In the July 3rd edition of the Daily Universe it was reported in "Police Beat" that "a male subject walked into a Relief Society class."

"The students reported that he had an unpleasant odor and an unkempt appearance. The bishop asked the person to leave, he did." This incident is a little disturbing.

I was unaware of the fact that only well-dressed, pleasant-smelling people are allowed to attend LDS church meetings. I sincerely hope facts were omitted from the article, and the man was not just dismissed without a second thought.

How sad it would be if this experience was the man's only exposure to the LDS faith.

Questions accompany BYU's cyberspace venture

Jae H. Moon
Colorado Springs, Colo.

I'd like to respond to Kelly McDonald, and to the other students' comments who contributed to the "Cyberspace raising privacy concerns" article.

When I initially read this article, I tried to step back so I could see the whole picture. I have three concerns I must address.

The executive director of university computing services said that BYU does not make it a practice of policing student's e-mail accounts searching for inappropriate correspondence.

McDonald also said "if someone reports a problem, illegal activity or gross violation of the honor code, this might prompt us to look at someone's e-mail."

This means if the student body does not want BYU to read their e-mail, then they should not give BYU any reasons to want to read their e-mail. Can it be that simple?

The first concern we must address is not whether a student can be treated as an employee, but whether Congress considers BYU to be a company.

We all know that Brigham Young University is a non-profit organization, meaning it receives tax privileges that businesses do not get.

Not all BYU students work on campus, so this policy about treating students as employees has no weight or value.

As students we pay tuition and as members a big amount of our tithes are used to benefit us and this great institution. We should be paid to go to school here if we are considered employees.

The second concern is whether all students understand BYU's policy about e-mails.

One student replied, "I feel that by giving my word of honor not to engage in morally degrading activities..."

I must ask how can students engage in morally degrading activities via e-mail? It is not like the two parties are sitting on the computer interacting with each other at the same time.

One sends an e-mail and the other replies back. If McDonald's statement about BYU policy is true, then the only reason why students would get their e-mail checked is if they had already done something that went against the Honor Code.

The problem here is, some students are susceptible to this policy, but not all of the students.

McDonald clearly stated "Not all students possessing e-mail accounts on campus are subjected to the same administrative policy concerning e-mail privacy." I say to Kelly McDonald, if some of the students are susceptible to this policy then all students should have BYU looking over their back as they write their e-mails.

It isn't ethical for some students to be cautious about what they write and not for others.

BYU college professors should also be included in this agreement because as professors they should not have anything to hide. Right?

My third concern will be asked in a form of a question. Is it morally ethical for BYU to maintain its right to access student e-mail folders, just because Congress has not clearly stated whether a university has the authority to examine students' e-mails?

In the article, it even said that Congress makes the businesses "provide advance written notification to employees [when] e-mail messages ... are to be monitored..."

If students are going to be treated as employees at BYU then the Electronic Communications Privacy Act should "technically" be applied to us also.

Show students teacher evaluations

Mary Ann Fuhrman
Salt Lake City

The time to register for Fall Semester is rapidly approaching. If you look through the class schedule, you'll simply find a long list of courses attached to a long list of instructors.

You want the best possible class with a teacher that is interesting, concerned, and prepared to equip you with the skills you need to succeed. But how do you choose?

In many cases, it is impossible to know about an instructor before registering for a class. If you don't know someone who has had the instructor, you are out of luck.

Once I had a professor I could not agree with to save my life. We would discuss things in class and it was her way or no way.

Her attitude turned me off to learning in her class, but I did my best. The ironic thing is I talked to a friend of mine that had graduated 10 years ago; he knew the professor and had similar experiences with her.

Had I known, I would have found someone else. BYU's University Committee on Teacher Evaluation is concerned with making it easier for students to choose better instructors for themselves.

Allowing students access to information obtained through evaluations is one idea getting tossed around in committee meetings.

Students could obtain a track of potential instructors from their merit or through the CougarNet.

From these records students choose more carefully the professors would meet their needs and learning styles.

Every instructor would receive evaluations by students.

Presently, teacher evaluation required only for instructors who have obtained tenure. Evaluations are a "continuing faculty status" process.

Once a faculty member has completed the tenure review process, evaluations used at their discretion for self-improvement.

Evaluations would need to be shown in order to make the process more efficient and less wasteful if all faculty members were evaluated.

The committee has suggested that students use anonymous PIN numbers to evaluate instructors on AIM terminals.

All students would be required to complete evaluations before their would be issued.

Making changes in the evaluation process may do more than take the tery out of registration.

Instructors may improve their tional efforts.

Evaluations may encourage members to be more sensitive to needs, particularly if these evaluations played a significant role in "continuing faculty status" and merit pay decisions.

Ban on freon not necessary

Adrian L. Arp
Twin Falls, Idaho

The worldwide CFC ban will likely cost $5 trillion within a dozen years.

It will also result in 20 million deaths annually from starvation and disease due to the impact of greatly increased cost of refrigeration on food storage and transport.

Dr. Hugh W. Ellsaesser, meteorologist, is among other scientists who openly dispute the false claim that CFCs are causing a hole in the ozone layer.

Even NASA's chief scientist, Dr. James Hansen, said, "We're making extrapolations based on nothing but models, and models are often wrong."

Dr. Ellsaesser suggests the real problem is behind the freon ban: "Literally hundreds of non-governmental organizations, environmentalists, the media, United Nations and others have been exploiting acid rain, the ozone hole, global warming and other issues to advance other agendas including development of a world government."

This unscientific madness is being stopped to preserve life and liberty.

With or without medication, giving birth is heroic

What's best for the baby? That's what my wife and I asked each other when we first learned the baby was coming. Can you believe it? Still nine more months and we were already wondering what was best for her.

We read numerous books and talked to everyone we knew about nutrition and exercise.

You learn fast that great answers and books full of information only allow you to consider your options more intelligently. In the end, you still have to make the decisions yourself.

Our first prenatal visit to my wife's doctor was pretty disappointing. We had hoped he would answer some of our most important questions.

Specifically, we wanted to know what his stand was about having a natural (unmedicated) birth.

The doctor spoke right up, "Oh, you don't have to be a hero ... you'll want that epidural."

That was the last time we went to see him. We chose a Certified Nurse Midwife to be our healthcare provider instead.

That was the best decision we made. Unlike our previous appointment with the doctor, we were praised for making a conscious decision for our birth plan.

I truly enjoyed every visit up till the time we had our baby. The CNMs were pleasant, encouraging and confident that we would have a great birth experience.

We still had to deal with people that disagreed with or didn't understand why we would consciously choose to have a baby without medication.

I was amazed by the comments our choice generated.

We had made our decision. We were careful to not force our views on anyone else. And I can honestly say I don't think less of couples who decide on alternate methods of birth. Some mothers are not in a position to make that choice. The fact stands, giving birth in any way is heroic.

With this opinion we hoped for the same courtesy from others.

"You're not having an epidural? Isn't that bad for the baby?" one woman asked me.

I wonder how many people (doctors included) realize that whatever the mother takes into her body, the baby gets a strong dose of too. Isn't this why mothers are warned against smoking, drinking alcohol and taking hard drugs during pregnancy?

Often, one medicine given to speed up labor is only countered by another to slow it down.

Doctors and medication are great for treating illness. But I feel that the state of labor and giving birth is not a sickness at all; it is the most natural thing in the world.

Please understand, my wife and I are definitely not anti-doctor. We planned all along to have the baby in the American Fork hospital. We were very aware of the possibility of complications. My wife's life takes priority over any birth plan, and we were prepared to take any step to ensure that all would go well.

All did go well.

Readers don't need a proud father boasting about how well his wife did delivering their baby. But I think it's appropriate to say that it is the most difficult thing we ever did.

I won't take much credit. She endured the exhaustion and the pain. I just kept saying I believed in her. Together, we worked through one contraction at a time.

We'd both be ungrateful if we didn't give thanks to God. My wife and I both agree that He gave us the energy and strength to accomplish this lofty goal.

My wife delivered a healthy, alert baby. And we both have confidence that we can do anything we put our minds to.

Waiting list associated Wyview

By BERT MILLS
Universe Staff Writer

With the old and in with the new familiar theme at Housing Services preparation begins for the placement of new student family units.

Housing Services has plans to finish Wyview Park, the new married housing units, by the beginning of August. Just as Wymount has a waiting list, a list for Wyview has begun.

Wyview is a lot of interest from tenants asking about transportation, said Garry Briggs, assistant manager of family housing. There will be a total of 426 new units in the completed project. Apartments will be two and three bedrooms and a few will be equipped with disabilities.

Units will include CougarNet air conditioning and storage space. Each apartment will have its own thermostat.

Apartments are somewhat larger than Wymount, said David Hunt, of Housing Services.

Proposed rental rate for the two-bedroom apartments is MOVING ON UP: Married student housing goes up at Wyview Park scheduled to be finished in December. CougarNet access, storage space, a multi-purpose room featuring soundproof bishops' offices and a media center are some of the amenities of the new units.

$450, while the rate for the 90 three-bedroom apartments is $540.

The central building, which will be complete in December, will have housing business offices, a convenience store and a laundry facility. The laundry facility will be larger than any other at Wymount. The hot water tank for the facility holds 530 gallons of water.

A multi-purpose building will be located near the central building. It will have a large meeting room for ward and community activities. Soundproof offices for bishops, a media center, an area for meal preparation and restrooms will also be included.

The children of Wyview Park were also kept in mind as plans were made. Swings, bars to play on, play areas and other equipment will be scattered in the complex for the children's use.

The students and their spouses will also have play areas. Basketball courts, volleyball pits and a large grassy area will be part of the housing.

Journeys part of life, speaker says

By MELISSA ROBERTSON
Universe Staff Writer

People can better relate to the Mormon pioneers when they realize that everyone is a pioneer in a spiritual wilderness, a curator of the Western and Mormon Americana archives in the Harold B. Lee Library said at the Forum on Tuesday.

DAVID J. WHITTAKER

Whittaker said the physical hardships of the LDS pioneers' were an outward aspect of what the journey was really about. Making candles and soap was not what made a pioneer, it was an exodus into the wilderness in which participants had to decide how much to get out of the journey.

Whittaker said that there have always been journeys.

"One of the key themes in the Book of Mormon is that of exodus: The departure of righteous groups into the wilderness under divine commandment and guidance," he said.

By going away from the things they knew, pioneers were reminded that the earth was not their home. But they had landmarks to guide them, Whittaker said.

"For them, the Gospel of Jesus Christ was the way back to the world and the relationships they had lost. But here they could be tested; here they could seek, through their personal experience, for the true and the beautiful in contrast to the false and the ugly," he said.

Today, people make choices also, Whittaker said.

"All knowledge is not of the same value and if we do not wish to fill our minds with trivia we must make careful decisions about what we remember," he said.

Sacred ordinances like the temple and the sacrament provide ways for people to remember the important things, Whittaker said.

"We must not forget that the concern for construction of a temple anchored both ends of the Mormon Westward movement," he said.

Everyone makes a journey, Whittaker said, but people make decisions on what type of journey they will make. People who make a journey are either tourists or travelers. Tourists seek the safe, familiar route, the food that is like home and a good time. Travelers look for new experiences, are open to new cultures and challenges, and are willing to experience things that conflict with their world view.

World-wide T.V. channels tuning out to local programs

GRANT R. MADSEN
Universe Staff Writer

Research by a BYU professor indicates that more and more people in countries may channel surf television networks like CNN to enjoy more localized programming.

Straubhaar, professor of communications and director of the communications research center, said research indicates that when given a choice, people are looking for programming as close to their own culture as possible.

Advances in technology are bringing more and more people to just that.

These days are the days when Latin America or Asia tune into American-made programming, he said. Instead of purchasing modes of "Dallas" or "The A-Team" was once the case, now they are producing their own programming, he said.

In the study, which covered decades worth of programming, the schedules of Asian, Latin American, Middle Eastern, Caribbean and Canadian countries.

Straubhaar said he looked back a week's worth of old programming for over 20 different countries and the study showed that there is a definite movement down from global to more national or local programming.

In China, the option to watch TV, a music video station that focuses on Asian musicians, usually over American MTV, he said, is because people want to see their own culture represented and TV in their own language," he said.

Though people pay attention to stations like CNN, they rarely watch them consistently because it takes a high level of English competency to completely understand everything the reporters are saying," he said.

He said his research shows that more and more foreign producers are filling the local niche that American producers are not.

In countries like Brazil, local producers take great pride in their work and feel that it is as good as, or better than, American-made television, Straubhaar said. "Producers of the telenovela, Brazilian soap operas, feel that they can produce a better soap opera for their culture than we can. They take a lot of pride in it," he said.

And some countries even export their shows to countries whose culture is closer to their own than American TV. "Brazil sells millions of dollars worth of programming to over 110 different countries," Straubhaar said.

"Larger and richer countries like Brazil have long produced their own shows. But I think most people would be surprised to know that even tiny countries like the Dominican Republic produce most of their own programming now," he said.

Changes in the tastes of audiences has also encouraged local producers to go into business.

"There is especially a greater demand now for local news. People still like to see the international, but the bread and butter is local," Straubhaar said.

Another factor of success for foreign production is that the quality of programming has improved through the years, Straubhaar said. "The people doing the production are getting more and more sophisticated all the time. They are developing the expertise to pull it off."

Straubhaar said he has almost finished compiling the results of his research into a book that hopefully will be published next year. He said he hopes that media classes will use the book to gain a better idea of what broadcasting is like in other countries.

Hollywood is another target for his book, Straubhaar said. He said his book tells the industry they need to watch out, or they will find themselves in a situation where they will not be able to compete.

BIKING ON ANTELOPE ISLAND: Neil Davis and Kerry Price bike along the White Rock Bay Loop Overlook trail. The variety of terrain has made the island popular among road and mountain bikers.

Utah's scenic Antelope Island hot spot for mountain bikers

By BRADLEY S. RICHARDSON
Universe Staff Writer

For many, the Great Salt Lake represents brine shrimp, swarms of killer mosquitoes and that well-known lake smell, but few know of the lake's best kept secret, which is surrounded by at least seven miles of water.

Antelope Island, located 25 minutes northeast of Salt Lake City, is becoming one of Utah's recreational hot spots — particularly for road and mountain bikers.

The island's steep mountain terrain, arid desert climate and sandy beaches introduce mountain bikers to a wide variety of rides and recreation.

"It's great," said Chris Johnson, 46, from South Weber. "This is as clear as the air gets out here."

Johnson, an avid bike rider, has ridden the island's roads and trails many times. "It's a great place to come road or mountain biking," he said. "The pavement is flat, easy and has little traffic."

The road, a 7.2-mile causeway, takes riders from the mainland to the island. The road has wide bike lanes on each side to make riding safer and more enjoyable.

"There are not so many places you can go with this (sized) lane and no traffic," Johnson said. "You've got lots of space."

Johnson takes advantage of the easy ride by pulling his 3-year-old son, Lars, behind his bike in a kid trailer.

Once on the island, bikers can ride down to the beach for a quick swim in the "anyone can float" saltwater or go directly to the mountain bike trails.

One of the main attractions is the buffalo corral located a few minutes from the mountain bike trailhead. The island has one of the largest publicly owned bison herds in the nation.

The White Rock Bay Loop mountain trail gives the rider a good view of the often unseen west side of the island and lake.

The 9.2-mile loop does have some steep grades. If you are not accustomed to mountain biking, you may need to get off and walk your bike in a few spots.

Mark Roberts from Bountiful rides on mountain bike trails twice a week. He said Saturday's temperatures were a rarity for a ride in July.

"The views are great up here," Roberts said after riding to the Split Rock Bay Overlook. "It's a different type of riding than riding the alpine type of terrain in the mountains," he said.

"You don't have to go to Moab to go biking," said Tim Smith, manager of the Antelope Island State Park. However, the ideal time to ride the island is in February and March, he said.

"We don't get near the amount of snow accumulation as the mainland," Smith said. "It's year-round biking."

Beware, island temperatures are rather warm during the summer months.

Because of the mountain biker mentality of "the need for speed," accidents are to be expected on the trails.

In contrast, accidents on the road rarely occur, Smith said. He encourages all riders to wear a helmet.

The park's trails are designed more for those that wish to see the island's scenery than for those that like to race, Smith said.

Next June, an 11-mile trail will be built along the east side of the island.

The park plans to make a 30 to 35-mile trail that will circle the entire island to cater to the needs of the hard-core mountain biker, Smith said.

The never-ending debate on scientific versus religious discovery continues in the movie, "Contact."

Directed by Robert Zemeckis, "Contact" is based on Carl Sagan's novel of the same name. The project was intended to ask probing, cosmological questions.

Hancock happy with hurling in Canada

by ERIK R. RASMUSSEN
Universe Sports Writer

Football does not start until August, but in the interim, baseball's boys of summer have their stage. As thousands flock to the Salt Lake Buzz at Franklin Field, the blue and white uniforms wistfully long for football.

There was no football at Franklin Field this weekend, but a melding of football and baseball when a quarterback returned to Utah. Ryan Hancock, the Cougars' 1992 starting quarterback, was not passing for 400-plus yards or handing to Jamal Willis. Hancock pitched out of the bullpen of the Vancouver Canadians, the Triple-A affiliate of the Anaheim Angels.

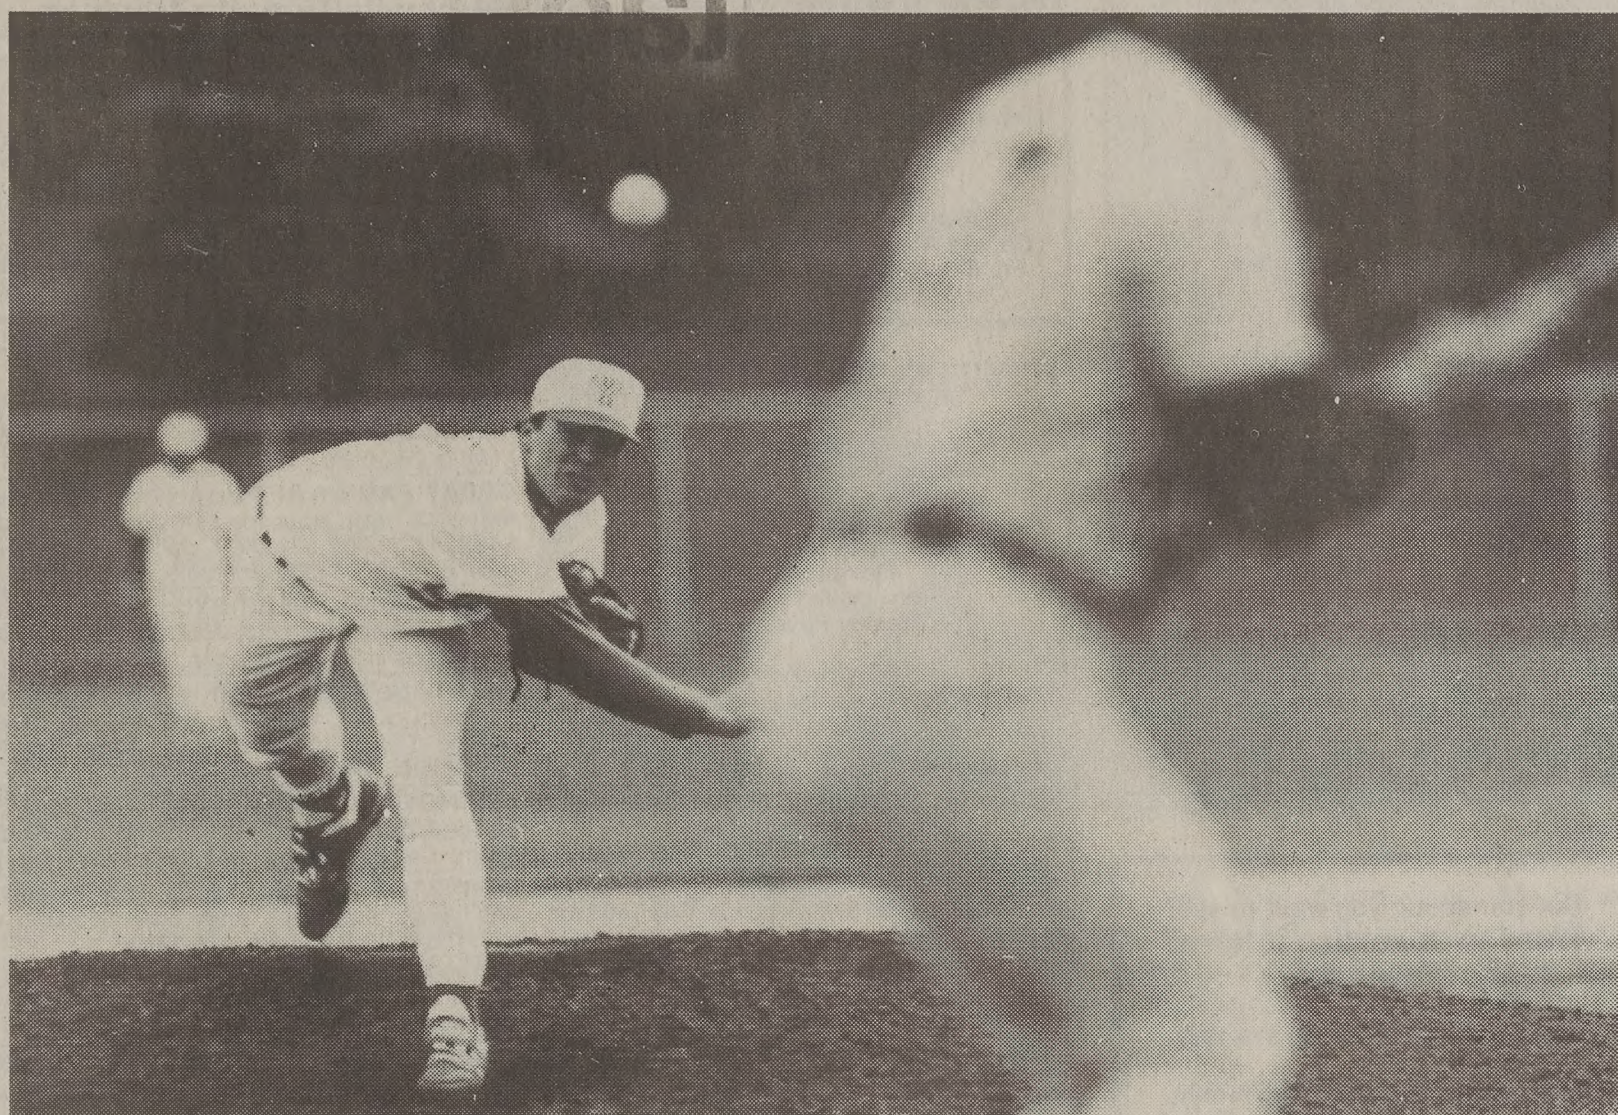

"It's fun to come back here," Hancock said in an interview before Friday's game. "I get to play in front of friends and family."

Hancock, a native of Cupertino, Calif., was at BYU from 1990-93. During those years, he played both football and baseball. He once ran for 158 yards and two touchdowns in a spring game and two interceptions later garnered a save for the baseball team.

Hancock, at 6 feet 2 inches and 200 lbs., was heavily recruited out of high school. Stanford, Miami, Texas A&M and others wanted him, and the Angels drafted him in the 14th round with an offer of $1,000,000 to play baseball. But Hancock decided on Provo.

During the 1992 football campaign, injuries on the team brought Hancock into a starting job. He led the Cougars to an upset win over Utah State and a Western Athletic Conference championship, before a knee injury in the Utah game ended his football career.

and I was able to pitch," Hancock said. "It's fine and doesn't bother me now."

He was drafted in the second round by the Angels, and worked his way up to Anaheim in less than four years.

"Playing in the bigs was everything you hear about and more. They treat you really well."

Hancock was with the Angels for seven weeks, going 4-1 while there. But he hurt his shoulder last season and returned to the Canadians this season. "I had a great time up with the Angels. I met Chuck Finley, Jim Abbott, and a lot of other big names at spring training — it was fun to play with them," Hancock said. "Pro baseball is just like any other business, you make friends and take things as they come."

Hancock led a "normal" BYU life, including entertaining thousands of rabid football fans on Saturdays.

"It was a lot of fun to play in front of 65,000 people at Cougar Stadium, and to play at places like Notre Dame."

Hancock is dedicated to improving and working his way back up to the show. "I just need to make sure I'm improving. I can't control getting called up or not. Management is really pretty non-communicative about if you'll get called up or not."

But Hancock is upbeat about his career.

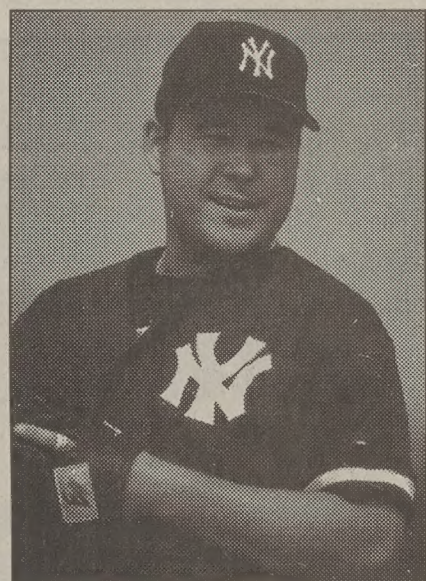

"I'm still pretty young, and any time things can change depending on who they need."

Japanese pitcher bears Yankee slaps from his American father

Associated Press

NEW YORK - His fastball and movement were the talk of the ball last week.

The talk is of Kota Irabu's father. The Japanese star, made an excellent major league for the Yankees, has an American father, the pitcher's stepfather. The New York Irabu, speaking by telephone from Japan, said that his wife, Kazue, and his unidentified American father are his birth parents, the paper said today.

There has been speculation in Japan that the pitcher's father was an American serviceman, the Times said. Japanese birth documents list a parent only if he or she is a Japanese citizen, and the family has not spoken about Irabu's parentage.

The elder Irabu said the subject was too sensitive for him to talk about at length. He did say he became the pitcher's stepfather soon after he was born, but he would not offer details about the precise date, whether his stepson ever knew his real father, where the man lives or whether he is still alive.

Irabu, 28, is intent on protecting his privacy and gives interviews only on days he pitches. Kota Ishijima, Irabu's interpreter, said the pitcher probably would not address the stepfather's remarks.

Irabu struck out nine in 6 2-3 innings in his major league debut Thursday against Detroit.

Senate committee probing possible overseas funding

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Fund-raiser Huang asked his Indonesian contact to wire money to the United States for a contribution to the Democratic Party, documents introduced at a Senate hearing showed.

The documents also showed Huang "kindly wire" money to the bank in Los Angeles to the bank of Huang, the money-raiser, in an Aug. 17, 1992 memo to the Lippo Group conglomerate in Hong Kong.

The items the money would be used for: "DNC Victory — $50,000," the memo said.

The memo was released by the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee as the panel began its second week of hearings into campaign finance abuse. The committee is also looking into whether Huang contributed to the 1996 Democratic campaign.

The memo "certainly looks like the kind of foreign money into an election campaign in 1992," said Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn.

Sen. Thompson, an international expert knowledgeable about the Lippo Group, testified that in the last five years the group has increased ties with the United States and has dozens of joint ventures on mainland China.

Another document made public at the hearing showed that a British citizen pledged $100,000 to the Democrats in 1995 in exchange for a meeting with top national security officials to discuss "several policy options" regarding Taiwan.

The document did not make clear whether the meeting ever occurred.

The documents were provided last week by the Democratic National Committee, said Sen. Fred Thompson, the committee chairman.

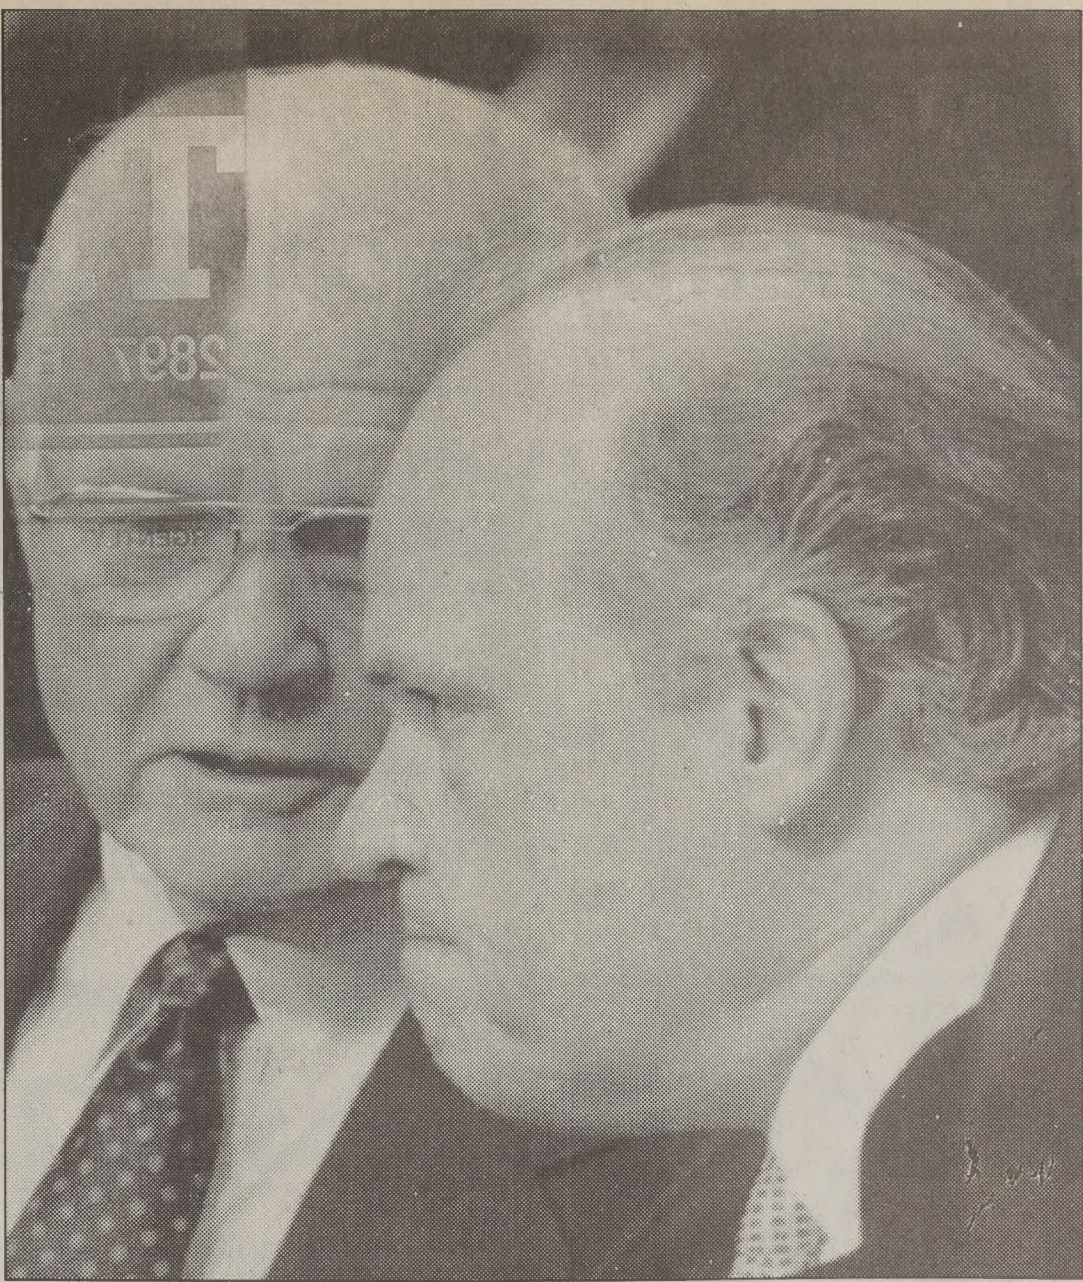

The Lippo memo was tied to an Aug. 12, 1992 check from Hip Hing Holdings Ltd., a Lippo company in Los Angeles. Huang worked for Hip Hing at the time but left to work for the Commerce Department and then was hired as a fund-raiser by the Democratic National Committee.

Juliana Utomo, who worked for Huang at Hip Hing, testified Tuesday that while Hip Hing was making contributions to the DNC under Huang's direction, it was losing money.

Ms. Utomo identified financial statements that showed the company lost $482,000 in 1992 and $493,000 the next year.

Huang left Lippo in the summer of 1994, worked for Commerce beginning in August 1994 and began employment at the Democratic National Committee in January 1996 as chief fund-raiser in the Asian-American community.

"He or Lippo or both thought of (Huang) as a Lippo employee" after he left the company, one GOP official said.

WITH OPEN EARS: Committee chairman Sen. Fred Thompson, R-Tenn., right, confers with co-chairman Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, at a hearing about campaign finance abuse July 8. Tuesday's hearing revealed that John Huang, chief fund-raiser for the Democrats in the 1996 campaign, may have wired overseas for a contribution to ensure a "DNC Victory."

The committee also has possession of a letter written to a White House aide in 1993 by a California Senate official, recommending Huang for a government job. The memo describes the closeness of Huang to Lippo owner James Riady. The Riady family is close to Clinton, and the committee is trying to learn whether the Lippo Group was the source of any illegal foreign money given to DNC.

Visit to former mission brings gratitude

by DENISE PALMER
Universe Staff Writer

Returned missionaries dream of the day they can go back and visit the people they served their missions. But what to expect when they return?

Folster, a senior majoring in education, served in the Macao mission. She didn't know what to expect when she returned to visit the people from her mission.

Some things will be different, but I want it to be the same. You get a certain way and want to know how you remembered things, but they won't be. I try not to let things to be the same, because then I know I'm setting myself up for disappointment," she said prior to her visit.

Michael Lemperle, a junior majoring in international relations, had few expectations when he returned to visit the Dominican Republic Santo Domingo East Mission where he served.

"I didn't have a lot of expectations. I expected to see people, and to see people that I taught (who) have gone inactive," he said.

Both Folster and Lemperle said they had mixed feelings as they visited the people and places they served. Both were excited to see members doing well, but disheartened by those who were struggling.

"The highlight was seeing all the people again that I knew before and (who) I got to know. I liked being able to associate with them as normal people, and doing all the things I couldn't do as a missionary: swimming in the ocean, being able to hug people that I couldn't before," Folster said.

"I was actually surprised at how many (members) were still active," Lemperle said.

"It was great to see the people who were happy, who were actually being blessed by the gospel," he said.

"It's really neat to see people who have stayed strong and true to what they promised to do. Seeing them still strong makes you feel like an instrument — like you were useful and that your influence is still around, despite the fact that it's probably not," Folster said.

Lemperle and Folster said that although it was great to see members doing well, it was also difficult to see those who were struggling. Folster said it was hard to see members who had become less active.

"That's the worst — knowing how far you saw them come, knowing what they'd achieved and how far they'd progressed, and then just to backslide. It made me furious in some cases," she said.

Folster also said she had mixed feelings as she visited investigators who were never baptized.

"It was really cool to see them. It was also kind of sad in a way knowing that you had a chance to help them and they didn't accept it or that we didn't help them enough," she said.

"I was also filled with a feeling of gratitude knowing that I had an opportunity to work with these people, knowing that they knew us and how much they loved us. Maybe one day they'll let other missionaries in and learn from them — hopefully," she said.

she said.

Although there were ups and downs about returning to visit, both Folster and Lemperle said their visits made them thankful for the opportunity to serve a mission.

"It was like I actually accomplished something, like I affected their lives dramatically — not only them, but their families," Lemperle said.

"You can't really express, but it was a really good feeling, a good sense of gratitude. It definitely strengthened my testimony," he said.

"It made me feel extremely, extremely grateful for serving a mission. Seeing all of the people and places just brought all of it back, just the flood of memories again about the things that I did and who I became," Folster said.

"It reminded me of what I should be doing now and trying to continue in the path so I don't backslide like some of the people that I saw. Being out in the mission field again reminded me of what's most important," she said.

Plaintiffs' case weak, says tobacco attorney

Associated Press

MIAMI — Research indicating secondhand smoke causes illness is surprisingly weak, a tobacco industry attorney told jurors Tuesday at the trial of a lawsuit filed by flight attendants who blame their illnesses on smoky cabin air.

"There is no good, strong evidence that secondhand smoke causes disease in non smokers," said David Hardy, representing Philip Morris and Lorillard.

"There is evidence, but you'd be surprised how weak that is."

Hardy was the first attorney to outline the case for the nation's five biggest cigarette makers and two industry groups accused of fraud and misrepresentation by covering up the risk of passive smoke.

Jurors must decide a key question in the landmark $5 billion case without specific scientific evidence, Hardy said.

"There's no study that says that flight attendants get more lung or heart disease than other people," he said.

The industry's opening statements were presented after the judge imposed a gag order barring both sides from talking about the case outside court.

Circuit Judge Robert Kaye had previously told the plaintiffs and defendants to not discuss the merits of the case.

"You obviously are not following the court ruling," he said as he imposed the gag order after court convened Tuesday.

The gag order was triggered by an impromptu news conference held Monday by R.J. Reynolds senior vice president Dan Donahue, after the flight attendants' attorney, Stanley Rosenblatt, had completed his opening arguments.

Rosenblatt had accused the industry of deceiving and misleading the public by saying the hazards of smoking and secondhand smoke are still in dispute.

Rosenblatt said testimony by two former surgeons general, renowned doctors and researchers and tobacco executives themselves will convince jurors that secondhand smoke is deadly and that its danger has been covered up.

Republicans, U.N. plans to reduce 'bloating' Democrats, work for tax relief

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Exuding optimism as they met to reconcile differences over taxes and Medicare, President Clinton and congressional Republicans said Tuesday they could have tax relief to the American people by summer's end.

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott told Clinton he'd have a bill to sign by Aug. 1, giving American taxpayers their biggest tax cut since the Reagan administration. "It's a big order. But I think we can do it," said Lott, R-Miss.

Even as Clinton again insisted on tax relief for the working poor, he shelved all hints of a veto threat. "It does not serve the American people well if we explicitly and publicly turn this thing into a gunfight at the OK corral," he said. "What we're trying to do is work through our differences."

Despite the bipartisan warmth around the table in the Cabinet room, where the president met with about two dozen leaders from both parties, efforts to reach agreement on tax reform and Medicare changes exposed a rift today within the GOP about how cozy to get with Clinton.

Wisconsin Gov. Tommy Thompson faulted fellow Republicans for losing the public relations battle over tax-cut legislation and said they must do a better job rebutting Democratic attacks that the bills unfairly benefit the wealthy.

"I think we're losing," Thompson told reporters. "There's no question the Democrats are much better at rumormongering and much better at getting the message out. We have not done the best job selling our story."

Jim Nicholson, chairman of the Republican National Committee, added that Clinton has "a powerful pulpit" from which he has engaged in "vintage class-warfare rhetoric." Republicans have said that support for the GOP tax bill rises substantially when details of the package are explained to people.

Later Tuesday, senior lawmakers involved in negotiating the final details of a tax cut, planned a session to continue working out differences in competing Houses and Senate tax bills passed last month.

"Loading one idea for accommodating the president's education priorities, House Speaker Newt Gingrich said Tuesday that he asked Clinton to consider shifting to poor grade-schoolers some of the money he wants to spend on tax breaks for college tuition.

"No commitment was made, but it was put on the table as a serious discussion," Gingrich told reporters outside the White House. "We want to help the poorest kids in America have a better chance of getting to college as well as helping middle-class kids get to college who've already got a good school and a good situation."

Gingrich, R-Ga., was also predicting that Republicans would win a sharp cut in capital gains taxes.

The House speaker has said previously that he expects three-cornered negotiations involving the House, the Senate and the White House to yield a tax cut that is acceptable to Clinton. In his comments during the day Monday, he stressed that he expects the capital gains cut being pushed by Republicans will be in the final "comprehensive agreement."

UNITED NATIONS — With revised flow charts and promises to slim down, the United Nations hopes to convince a skeptical Congress and public that it is taking seriously Washington's demands to reform.

Secretary-General Kofi Annan plans to announce his reform program Wednesday. It is expected to focus on administrative changes aimed at cutting staff, better coordinating U.N. operations worldwide and allowing the organization to function with a negative growth budget.

Annan hopes to reverse the perception, widespread in the United States, that the United Nations is a bloated, ineffectual organization that wastes American taxpayers' money.

Regardless of its effectiveness, the United Nations already is a smaller organization than it is often perceived.

The annual U.N. operating budget — about $2.6 billion — is only slightly larger than that of the state of North Dakota. Counting the U.N. headquarters and staffs of independent U.N. agencies, which maintain their own budgets, the U.N. system employs about 53,300 people worldwide.

By comparison, the state of Hawaii employs 62,500 people, including part-time and seasonal workers.

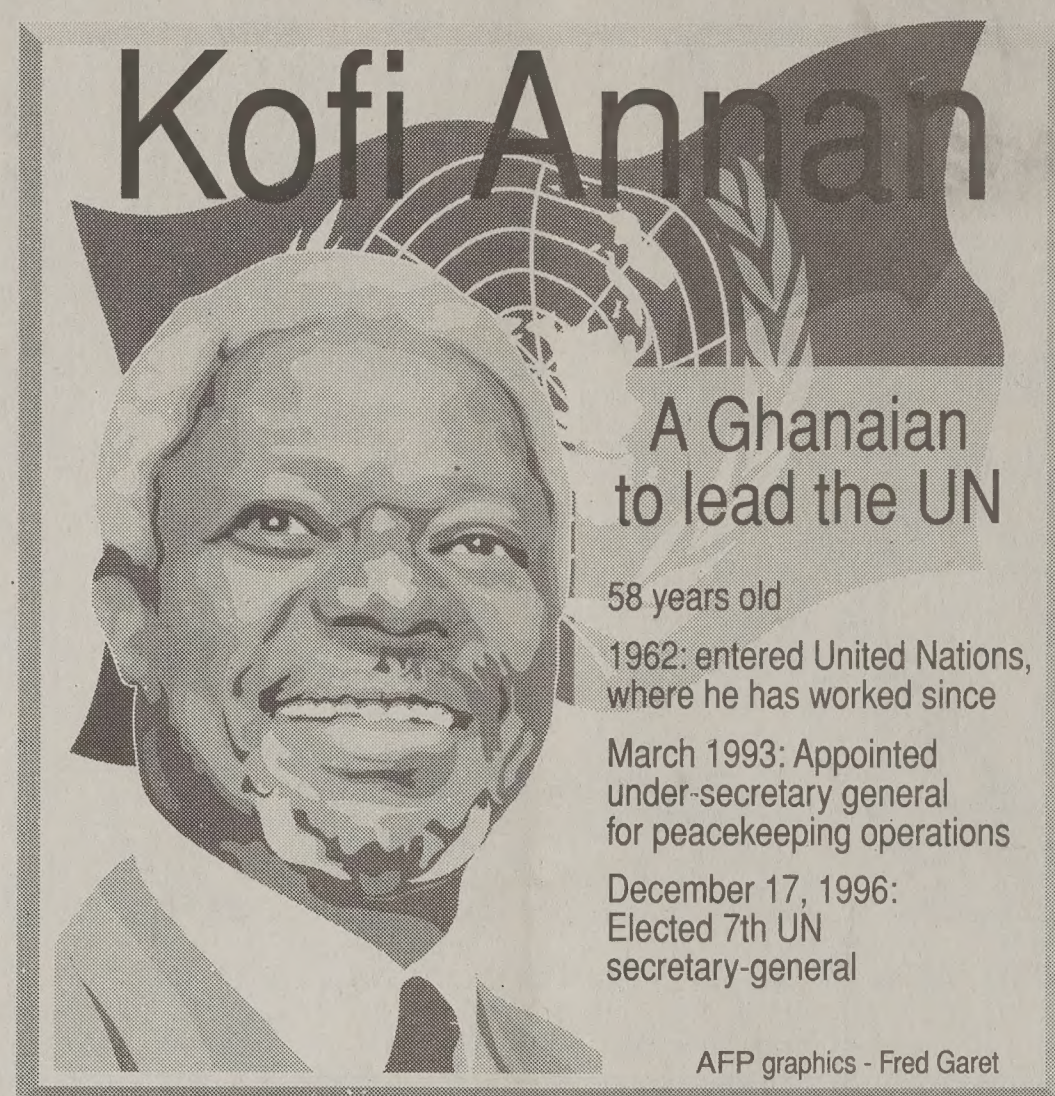

Some U.N. officials and American supporters believe the United Nations' image problem can be blamed on the notion that it doesn't do anything.

From a distance, it may look like an organization that stands by and watches a coup in Cambodia, allows thousands of Hutu refugees to die in the Congo, fails to bring peace to Somalia and issues empty declarations while those indicted for war crimes in the former Yugoslavia roam free.

The question is who's to blame?

"A lot of what the U.N. can do has to do with what the international community wants it to do," said John Tessoro of the U.N. Association of the United States. "And that has to do with the degree to which the international community is willing to take risks to effect change."

The United Nations is an instrument of the 185 member-states, in particular the 15-member Security Council. The council is dominated by the five permanent members — the United States, Britain, France, China and Russia — each of which can veto U.N. resolutions.

It is the council that dispatches peacekeepers to world trouble spots and decides which crises require U.N. action.

In the Cambodian crisis, for example, the council met Friday to discuss the ouster of First Prime Minister Norodom Ranariddh by his co-premier, Hun Sen. As the process threatened to unravel, the council simply called for mediation and avoided calling the upheaval a coup. That was largely because two members — China and Japan — insisted on a soft response.

The other council members were not prepared to demand more. Yet it was the United Nations — rather than the individual member-states — left to appear vacillating.

The council also nominates the secretary-general. Last year, the United States used its veto to block a second term for Secretary-General Boutros-Ghali, ostensibly because he opposed reform.

Boutros-Ghali's supporters also believed Washington was uncomfortable with his independent stand on issues including the Middle East and Yugoslavia.

For decades, the East-West conflict stymied the effectiveness of the United Nations since both Washington and Moscow could veto moves in the council that threatened their interests.

The end of the Cold War brought new hope that the major powers could work together through a revitalized United Nations.

That meant a more vigorous role for the Security Council in combating world crises.

But the spirit of "multi-lateralism" took a big hit in Somalia, when 18 elite American soldiers were killed in an attack on the stronghold of warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid in October 1993.

Three days later, President Clinton announced that all American forces, which reached a peak of 28,000, would be withdrawn.

It also marked the high-water mark in Washington's appetite for strong U.N. action.
